Giraffes

Giraffes are the tallest land animals on Earth, and they are instantly recognizable by their long necks and legs. These gentle giants are found in the savannas of Africa, where they feed on leaves and other vegetation.

One of the most famous poems about giraffes is "The Giraffe" by Ogden Nash. This poem humorously describes the giraffe's appearance, comparing it to a "ladder" and a "water tower."

> The giraffe has a neck that is long > And a body that is short. > It looks like a ladder > Or a water tower.

Another poem about giraffes is "The Giraffe's Dilemma" by Roald Dahl. This poem tells the story of a giraffe who is trying to reach a leaf that is just out of its reach. The giraffe tries and tries, but it can't quite reach the leaf.

> The giraffe has a long neck, > But not long enough, > And when he tries to eat the leaves > He almost chokes.

Bongos

Bongos are large, forest-dwelling antelopes that are found in the Congo Basin of Africa. These animals are known for their beautiful striped coats and their long, spiral horns.

One of the most famous poems about bongos is "The Bongo" by Elizabeth Bishop. This poem describes the bongo's beauty and its elusive nature.

> The bongo is a forest antelope, > A creature of the shade. > Its coat is striped with black and white, > And its horns are long and spiral.

Another poem about bongos is "The Bongo's Lament" by Kwame Dawes. This poem tells the story of a bongo that is being hunted by humans. The bongo is afraid for its life, and it cries out in lament.

> Oh, why must I be hunted? > Why must I live in fear? > I am a gentle creature, > Who only wants to live in peace.

Zebras

Zebras are black and white striped equines that are found in the savannas of Africa. These animals are known for their speed and their social nature.

One of the most famous poems about zebras is "The Zebra" by Carl Sandburg. This poem describes the zebra's beauty and its wild spirit.

> With zebra stripes upon his coat, > He gallops free and bold, > A wild thing from the grassland, > A creature of the plain.

Another poem about zebras is "The Zebra's Tale" by Langston Hughes. This poem tells the story of a zebra who is proud of its unique stripes. The zebra doesn't want to be like the other animals, and it refuses to change its appearance.

> I am a zebra, > Black and white, > And I am proud. > I will not change my stripes, > Not for anyone.

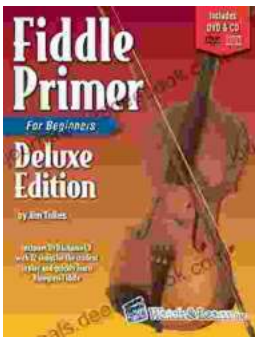

The poems in this article offer just a glimpse of the many ways that we can appreciate hoofed animals. These creatures are truly amazing, and they deserve our respect and admiration.

I hope that you have enjoyed this collection of poems. Thank you for reading!
