Kasparov argues that the current global order is unsustainable. The United States has been the dominant superpower for decades, but its power is declining. Meanwhile, Russia and China are rising, and they are increasingly challenging the US's global leadership. This is creating a new era of geopolitical instability, and the West must be prepared to face the challenges ahead.

Kasparov draws on his own experiences as a chess grandmaster to illustrate the dangers of complacency. In chess, the player who is ahead can often become overconfident and make mistakes. This can lead to a loss, even against a weaker opponent. Kasparov argues that the West is in danger of making the same mistake. The US has been the dominant superpower for so long that it has become complacent. This complacency could lead to a loss of global leadership, and even to a new world war.

Kasparov's book is a chilling wake-up call about the future of global security. He argues that the West must be prepared to face a resurgent Russia and China. This will require a new approach to foreign policy, one that is based on strength and realism. The West must also be prepared to defend its values and interests, even at the risk of war.

Kasparov's book is a must-read for anyone who is interested in the future of global security. It is a chilling wake-up call, but it is also a call to action. The West must be prepared to face the challenges ahead, or it will face the consequences.
