The History of Lace Knitting, Crochet, Tatting, & Lace

The origins of lace knitting, crochet, tatting, and lace are somewhat murky, but it is believed that all of these techniques originated in Europe during the Middle Ages. Lace knitting is thought to have developed from a technique called "needlepoint lace," which was used to create elaborate and ornate designs on fabric. Crochet and tatting are both believed to have developed from a technique called "bobbin lace," which was used to create delicate and intricate lace edgings.

Lace knitting, crochet, tatting, and lace quickly became popular throughout Europe, and they were used to create a wide variety of garments, accessories, and home décor. Lace was particularly popular during the Renaissance and Baroque periods, when it was used to decorate the clothing of the wealthy and powerful.

In the 19th century, lace knitting, crochet, tatting, and lace began to decline in popularity, as new and more efficient methods of production were developed. However, these techniques never completely disappeared, and they continue to be used by artisans around the world to create beautiful and unique works of art.

The First of Modern Lace Knitting: Dover Knitting

Dover Knitting is a type of lace knitting that was developed in the town of Dover, England, in the early 19th century. Dover Knitting is characterized by its use of fine thread and small needles, which create a delicate and intricate fabric. Dover Knitting is often used to create shawls, scarves, and other lightweight garments.

Dover Knitting was first popularized by a woman named Mrs. Ann Walker, who began teaching the technique to other women in Dover. Mrs. Walker's students went on to teach the technique to others, and Dover Knitting quickly became popular throughout England and beyond.

Today, Dover Knitting is still considered to be one of the finest types of lace knitting in the world. Dover Knitting shawls and scarves are highly prized by collectors, and they can be found in museums and private collections around the world.
