Artistic Career

Dlugoszewski began her artistic career as a watercolorist. In the 1930s, she transitioned to oil painting, developing a unique style that combined realism with a strong emphasis on linear design. Her paintings often depicted scenes of the California landscape and architecture, particularly the California Missions.

California Missions Research

In the 1940s, Dlugoszewski became fascinated by the history of the California Missions. She spent years researching and photographing these historic structures and their artifacts. Her book, "The California Missions: Their Restoration and Preservation," published in 1954, remains a seminal work on the subject.

Art Education

Dlugoszewski was also passionate about art education. She taught at the University of Southern California and the California Institute of the Arts. She developed innovative teaching methods that emphasized hands-on experience and the integration of art with other disciplines.

Later Life and Legacy

In her later years, Dlugoszewski continued to paint and write. She also served on numerous boards and commissions related to art and historic preservation. She passed away in 1984, leaving behind a legacy of artistic achievement and scholarly contributions.

Artistic Style

Dlugoszewska's artistic style was characterized by a combination of realism and abstraction. Her paintings often depicted recognizable scenes and objects, but she also used stylized forms and color to convey her own personal interpretations.

Major Works

Some of Dlugoszewski's most notable works include:

* "The California Missions" (1954) * "The Genesis of Modern Architecture" (1960) * "The California Landscape in Art" (1974)
